

IOSH Working Safely

Description

The IOSH Working Safely course, of which is always tailored to specific work environments and conditions, explores the essential parts of law to the extent necessary for delegates to identify the employees' actions required for compliance. The course also concentrates on identifying hazards and risks within the workplace, with the overarching aim to provide delegates with the knowledge to contribute to improving the organisations overall safety performance.

Our experienced Health and Safety professionals run this course through a series of practical exercises, as well as a final assessment.

Aims

Delegates will understand how to work more safely and be able to contribute to the overall safety of their organisation.

Objectives

Delegates will:

- Identify the various types of hazards found in the workplace
- Be able to assist managers to carry out risk assessments
- Clearly understand their individual responsibility for safety
- Know how to report accidents and incidents
- Learn how to monitor their own work activities and assist managers in their active monitoring activities
- Be able to identify competencies required for working safely

Duration 1 Day

Modules

- Importance of working safely
- H&S roles and responsibilities
- Risk assessment and risk control
- Identification of common hazards and controls
- Improving safety performance

